

Building a Coalition of Africa-Focused Funding Organizations & Philanthropists

AT A GLANCE

CorpsAfrica (a Peace Corps-inspired organization in Africa supported by a recent large foundation grant) along wanted to get on the map and develop relationships with Africa-focused funders all over the world. It, along with its co-host organizations - The Ford Foundation and the Clinton Global Initiative (CGI) - needed to raise its profile and generate substantive market intelligence, all while creating trust and substantive value for the Africa-focused philanthropic community on an ongoing basis. This case study about the creation of "AFRICA RISING" demonstrates how this was accomplished rapidly and effectively and with a shared sense of momentum with all the participants in the process.

THE CHALLENGE

How does an effective but comparatively under-known organization reach be seen as much more of a "player" in their field? How does that organization gain crucial strategic knowledge while providing enormous substantive value to others? How does it create community while also being at the center of the community?

OUR SOLUTIONS

We used our proprietary AI research approach, the input of some of the world's top experts, our curation and convening expertise... all applied to our comprehensive and sequenced process to get to our client's remarkably ambitious goal in a matter of weeks.
